Editorial Review

From the Author

With the slight obsession I have for serial killers, this book of poetry was years in the making. While it only took about a month to write, format, and edit, I put my love of crime dramas and writing into every word. Some pieces of poetry were harder to complete, because they had to be rewritten once or twice.

From the Inside Flap

The Mannequin

Sitting there, staring.
The space between us small.
She's ready, nearly nude.

Sitting there, staring
as I roll the pantyhose up her leg. No panties.

Sitting there, staring
with her soulless eyes up at the ceiling.

Sitting there, staring
I ease her dress on,
gently straightening wrinkles.

Sitting there, staring
even though I'm talking.
I tell her everything.

Sitting there, staring her bracelets go on one by one.

Sitting there, staring
I try getting her shoes
on twice before they go.

Sitting there, staring
Before I place her green beret on her head

Sitting there, staring
I check the drip.
Still going.

Sitting there, staring
I position her hands,
one on her stomach

Sitting there, staring
the other on her lap.
The drip stops.

Sitting there, staring
all dolled up,
she takes a sharp inhale.

Sitting there, staring
She's afraid.
Its never going to stop.
